Adamson was elected to speak at the company's 100th anniversary and give a testimonial.

"If we ever had a problem I would pick up the phone, just call the office and it was always taken care of," Adamson said. "I've had no problem whatsoever with them. They have prompt, courteous and fast service. I will not change from a company that has given me nothing but great service all this years."

In addition, Spring Brook is committed to being involved and giving back to the community it serves.

Stafstrom is the board chair of the nonprofit organization CCARC.

"I'm also very involved in the New Britain-Berlin Rotary Club, but other staff members are involved in the YWCA, other community nonprofits and organizations," Stafstrom said.

The company also makes donations and provides sponsorships to different events and charities.

Spring Brook originally started as a natural based business where they used to cut ice off the ponds and then it evolved into a delivery company for ice.

With the invention of the oil burner around World War II, the company became involved in the home heating oil business and distribution.
