the radio and through social media posts.

Bizzarro said one of his main goals in his campaign efforts was to remind people that there is an election this Tuesday where their voices will be heard if they go out to vote. Bizzarro, who is opposed to the proposed tolls in Connecticut, said that this election gives residents a unique opportunity to tell the legislature how they feel about the proposed budget and the approach the governor is taking.

“Residents of the 6th District: Get out and vote tomorrow, Tuesday, February 26. Let your voice be heard. Say no to tolls, new taxes, and out of control spending policies,” Bizzarro said Monday through a Facebook post.

Lopes said that he was also out campaigning the last few days. Lopes and his team knocked on doors in the district, made phone calls and sent out mail.

“We prioritized talking to the voters,” Lopes said.

Lopes also promoted his campaign on social media sites.

“I am running to represent New Britain, Berlin, and Farmington in the Connecticut State Senate because I understand the needs and problems that the hard-working people of this community face—I face them myself,” Lopes said on a Facebook post.

Lopes said one of his concerns is that the community is not always active in coming out to vote.

Wind takes trees down across several local towns

STAFF REPORT

The blustery weather caused dangerous situations in several central Connecticut towns.

According to several reports, trees reportedly came down in Plymouth, Southington and Newington due to winds gusting to over 50 mph on Monday.

A tree came down in a Plymouth yard at 733 Main St. Monday afternoon, and in Southington, a tree toppled over on Interstate 84 at Exit 30.

A tree came down on top of a garage on Gilbert Road in Newington.

A sign blew off a downtown New Britain building early Monday morning just missing a man walking on the street below.

Power outages were reported in Newington, Southington and Plainville as well.

The winds were expected to ease overnight and then temperatures were forecast to plummet into the teens by this morning, WFSB reported.

Snow is forecast to move into the area Wednesday night into Thursday morning.

community want someone like me who understands the needs and the problems of regular, everyday folk to be up at the Capitol pushing for them,” Lopes said on a video through Facebook.
