Okay Industries leads the way

NEW BRITAIN

By CIARA HOOKS

@HOOKS_CIARA

Okay Industries has been servicing the city for over 100 years making parts and assemblies for some of the world's largest medical companies.

Located at 200 Ellis St. in New Britain, Okay Industries has always been a leader in its field. The manufacturer has a second location at 245 New Park Drive in Berlin and a third location in Alajuela, Costa Rica.

Okay Industries began in 1911 as B. John Manufacturing as a tool and die company. In 1968, it changed its name to Okay Industries by its new owner Ed Okay, who had a Polish last name but shortened it to Okay.

Over the decades they've changed to a full-service contract manufacturer and manufactures components and subassemblies for the medical industry, including surgical stapling devices, instruments and implantable pacemakers and defibrillators. Parts for endoscopic cutters, arthroscopic surgery tools and robotic surgery tools are other components the manufacturer builds.

The engineering and innovative driven company takes pride in the importance of their complex parts and sets themselves apart from other manufacturers with their attention to precision. Their expert team combines advanced technology and quality craftsmanship on every project, collaborating with customers to solve complex design and manufacturing challenges. With state-of-the-art capabilities, the team's experience and skills help customers get to market faster, with improved results and optimized costs.

Okay Industries has kept its commitment to quality products and customer service to the communities it supplies. The technology-driven company has stayed on top of emerging trends and made sure its employees are the best and brightest.

Okay Industries has added three research and development labs to help better meet the needs of special customer projects. Plastic molding capabilities have also been added in New Britain and Costa Rica so Okay could become a more vertically integrated supplier and reduce the need for customers receiving shipments from multiple vendors.

Okay Industries has also worked toward training the future workforce by partnering with the Manufacturing, Engineering and Technology Academy at New Britain High School and has partnered with Central Connecticut State University to provide scholarships to students.

They also joined forces with the Community Foundation of Greater New Britain and the Consolidated School District of New Britain to provide Personal Protective Equipment facial shields to the Hospital of Central Connecticut during the pandemic. Assembly took place inside New Britain High School.

Okay Industries can be found online at okayind.com and reached at 860-225-8707.
