The family behind Jack of All Trades Remodeling is feeling a divine kind of gratitude this spring.

Father-and-son owners Daniel and Danny St. Laurent are enjoying their 36th year providing home remodeling services to the community. Staff is skilled in all the trades, from roofing, carpentry, plumbing and electrical, to heating and cooling and much more. They are also well-trusted by many loyal customers, including generations of families they have known for decades.

That kind of homespun, personalized business model is what the family-owned business is known for and one of the reasons why Jack of all Trades has continued success year after year.

“We just want to say thank you to the community, to our clients and thank you to our teammates who work with us every day,” Danny said. “We’re so grateful for the friendships and everything we’ve been blessed with.”

Staff will customize projects for each individual client, coordinate within their budget, and ensure they are satisfied with the completed work.

Longtime customers appreciate the St. Laurents’ attention to detail and keeping them informed of every decision made in their project.

Late last year the company launched its own insurance division to protect clients from insurance company fraud. This way, clients know their insurance company is reimbursing them adequately for emergency repairs.

Jack of All Trades serves Greater New Britain and surrounding communities. Word-of-mouth has provided ongoing referrals, as happy customers pass along their recommendation to other homeowners looking to start a project.

Danny extends a heartfelt thank you to them, and others who have helped his family’s business become the community pillar it is today.

“Most importantly,” he added, “thank you to God for consistently blessing us with happiness, peace and bliss as our company continues to positively flow forward.”
